The above-crossbows, purchased from April 2016 through November 2016, have a “nock sensor” which is designed to ascertain whether or not an arrow is properly loaded before allowing the trigger pull to be actuated. The sensor that senses whether an arrow is properly loaded can malfunction, which can cause the crossbow to fire unexpectedly, posing an injury hazard to the user or bystander.

The affected Barnett crossbows have a safety that is silver and the affected Browning crossbows have a safety that is black.
